(DEACON, -AL)], a. Pertaining to a deacon. diaconate (dī ăk′ ō nāt), n. The office, dignity, or tenure of the office, of a deacon; deacons collectively. diaconicon, -cum (dī ă kon′ i kŏn, -kŭm) [L. -cum, Gr. diakonikon, neut. adj., pertaining to a deacon, from diakonos, DEACON], n. A sacristy or vestry.

diacoustic (dī ă kou′ stik) [DI- (3), ACOUSTIC], a. Pertaining to diacoustics. diacoustics, n. The science of refracted sounds.

diacritic (1), -al (dī ă krit′ ik, -ăl) [Gr. diakritikos (DIA-, CRITIC)], a. Distinguishing, distinctive; discerning, able to perceive distinctions. diacritical mark, diacritic (2), n. A mark used to distinguish letters or sounds which resemble each other as written.

diactinic (dī ăk tin′ ik) [DI- (3), ACTINIC], a. Transparent to or capable of transmitting actinic rays.

diaculum [DIACHYLON].

diadelph (dī′ ă delf) [DI- (2), Gr. adelphos, brother], n. (Bot.) A plant of the Linnæan order Diadelphia, in which the stamens are united into two bodies or bundles by their filaments. diadelphous (-del′ fŭs), a. (Bot.) diadem (dī′ ă dem) [O.F. dyademe, L. and Gr. diadema (DIA-, Gr. deein, to bind)], n. A fillet or band for the head, worn as an emblem of sovereignty; a crown, a wreath, a reward; a crown of glory or victory; supreme power, sovereignty. v.t. To adorn with a diadem. diadem-spider, n. The garden spider, Epeira diadema, so called from its markings.

diæresis (dī ĕr′ ē sis) [L., from Gr. diairesis, from diaireein to divide (DI- (3), haireein, to take)], n. (pl. -eses) The resolution of one syllable into two; a mark placed over the second of two vowels to show that it must be pronounced separately, as Laïs.

diaglyph (dī′ ă glif) [from Gr. diagluphein (DIA-, gluphein, to carve)], n. A piece of sculpture in which the figures are sunk into the general surface; an intaglio. diaglyphic (dī ă glif′ ik), a.

diagnosis (dī ăg nō′ sis) [L., from Gr. diagnōsis (DIA-, gnōsis, inquiry, knowledge, from gignōskein, to learn, to recognize)], n. Determination of diseases by their symptoms; a summary of these; (Bot. and Zool.) a summary of the characteristics by which one species is distinguished from another; differentiation of character, style, etc., by means of distinctive marks. diagnose (dī ăg nōz'), v.t. To distinguish, to determine; (Med.) to ascertain the nature and seat (of a disease) from the symptoms; v.i. To make a diagnosis of a disease. diagnostic (-nos' tik), a. That serves to distinguish; characteristic; n. A sign or symptom by which anything is distinguished from anything else; a characteristic; (pl.) diagnosis. diagnostically, adv. diagnostician (-tish' ăn), n.

diagometer (dī ă gom' ĕ tĕr) [F. diagomètre (Gr. diagein, to carry across, -METER)], n. An instrument for measuring the relative conductivity of substances, originally used to detect adulteration in olive oil.

diagonal (dī ăg' ō nal) [L. diagōnālis, Gr. diagōnios (DIA-, gōnia, an angle)], a. Extending from one angle of a quadrilateral or multilateral figure to a non-adjacent angle, or from one edge of a solid to a non-adjacent edge; oblique, crossing obliquely; marked by oblique lines, ridges, etc. n. A right line or plane extending from one angle or edge to a non-adjacent one; a diagonal row, line, beam, tie, etc.; a fabric with diagonal twills or ridges. diagonal scale, n. (Math.) A scale in which small divisions are marked by oblique lines, so as to make minute measurements. diagonally, adv.

diagram (dī' ă grăm) [F. diagramme, L. and Gr. diagramma, from Gr. diagraphein (DIA-, graphein, to write)], n. (Geom.) A drawing made to demonstrate or illustrate some proposition, statement, or definition; an illustrative figure drawn roughly or in outline; a series of marks or lines representing graphically the results of meteorological, statistical, or other observations, or symbolizing abstract statements. diagrammatic (-măt' ik), a. diagrammatically, adv. diagrammatize (-grăm' ă tīz), v.t. diagraph (dī' ă grăf) [F. diagraphe (DIA-, -GRAPH)], n. An instrument used for drawing mechanically outline sketches, enlargments of maps, etc.

diaheliotropic (dī ă hē li ō trop' ik) [DIA-, HELIOTROPIC], a. (Bot.) Growing or turning transversely to the light. diaheliotropism (dī ă hē li ot' rō pizm), n. (Bot.) Tendency to grow transversely to the light.

dial (dī' ăl) [med. L. diālis, daily, from diēs, day], n. An instrument for showing the time of the day by the sun's shadow; the graduated and numbered face of a time-piece; a similar plate on which an index finger marks revolutions, indicates steam-pressure, etc.; an instrument used by lapidaries; (Wire.) the device for adjusting the tuning controls; *a time-piece, a watch; (slang) the human face. v.t. To measure or indicate with or as with a dial; to survey with a dial; to indicate on the dial of an automatic telephone the number one wishes to call up. dialling tone, n. The sound given by an automatic telephone to show that the line is clear. dial-plate, n. The face of a time-piece or other instrument with a dial.

dialect (dī' ă lekt) [L. dialectus, Gr. dialektos, from dialegesthai, to discourse (DIA-, legein, to speak)], n. A form of speech or language peculiar to a limited district or people. dialectal (dī ă lek' tăl), a. dialectally, adv. dialectology (-tol' ō ji), n. dialectologist, n.

dialectic (dī ă lek' tik) [O.F. dialectique, L. dialectica, Gr. dialektikē (technē), the dialectic (art), as prec.], a. Dialectal; pertaining to logic; logical, argumentative. n. (often in pl.) Logic in general; the rules and methods of reasoning; discussion by dialogue; the investigation of truth by analysis; the logic of probabilities; (Kant) critical analysis of knowledge based on science; (Hegel) the philosophic process of reconciling the contradictions of experience in a higher synthesis, the world-process which is the objective realization of this synthesis; a person skilled in logical reasoning and analysis. dialectically, adv. In a logical manner; dialectally. dialectician, n. One skilled in dialectics; a logician; a reasoner.

diallage (1) (dī ăl' ă jē) [Gr. diallagē, from diallassein (DIA-, allassein, to change)], n. (Rhet.) A rhetorical figure by which arguments, having been considered from various points of view, are brought to bear on one point.

dialogue (dī' ă log) [M.E. and O.F. dialoge, L. dialogus, Gr. dialogos (DIA-, logos, discourse, from legein, to speak)], n. A conversation or discourse between two or more persons; a literary composition in conversational form; the conversational part of a novel, etc. v.i. To hold a dialogue. v.t. To put into the form of a dialogue. dialogic (dī ă loj' ik), a. Of the nature of a dialogue. dialogically, adv. dialogist (dī ăl' ō jist), n. One who takes part in a dialogue; a writer of dialogues. dialogistic (-jis' tik), a. dialogize (dī ăl' ō jīz), v.i. To discourse in dialogue. dialogue-wise, adv.

dialysis (dī ăl' i sis) [Gr. dialusis (DIA-, luein, to loose)], n. (Rhet.) A figure by which connectives are omitted; (Gram.) a diæresis mark; (Chem.) the process of separating the crystalloid from the colloid ingredients in soluble substances by passing through moist membranes; a method of detecting poisons most of which are crystalloids. dialyse (dī' ă līz), v.t. (Chem.) dialyser (dī ă lī' zĕr), n. The apparatus in which the process of dialysis is performed. dialytic (-lit' ik), a. (Chem.) diamagnetic (dī ă măg net' ik) [DIA-, MAGNETIC], a. Pertaining to or exhibiting diamagnetism. n. A diamagnetic body or substance. diamagnetically, adv. diamagnetism (-măg' nĕ tizm), n. The force which causes certain bodies, when suspended freely and magnetized, to assume a position at right angles to the magnetic meridian, and point due east and west; the branch of magnetism treating of diamagnetic substances and phenomena. diamagnetize, v.t.

diamantiferous (dī ă măn tif' ĕr ŭs) [F. diamant, DIAMOND, -FEROUS], a. Yielding diamonds.

diameter (dī ăm′ ē tĕr) [O.F. diametre, L. and Gr. diametros (DIA-, metrein, to measure, cp. METER)], n. A straight line passing through the centre of any object from one side to the other; (Geom.) a straight line passing through the centre of a circle or other curvilinear figure, and terminating each way in the circumference; the length of such a line; the length of a straight line extending from side to side of anything; transverse measurement, width, thickness; (Opt.) the unit of measurement of magnifying power. diametral, a. diametrally, adv. diametrical (dī ă met′ ri kăl), a. Pertaining to a diameter, diametral; along a diameter, direct; (fig.) directly opposed; as far removed as possible. diametrically, adv.

diamond (dī′ ă mŏnd) [O.F. diamant, late L. diamas -antem, L. adamas -antem, Gr. adamas, ADAMANT], n. The hardest, most brilliant, and most valuable of the precious stones, a transparent crystal of pure carbon, colourless or tinted; a facet of this when cut; a figure resembling this, a rhomb; a playing-card with figures of this shape; a glazier's cutting tool with a diamond at the point; a very small type for printing; a small rhomboid sheet of glass used in old-fashioned windows; (fig.) a glittering point or particle; *adamant, a hard and impenetrable substance. a. Made of, or set with, diamonds; resembling a diamond or lozenge. v.t. To adorn with or as with diamonds. black diamonds: Dark-coloured diamonds; coal. rough diamond: A diamond in the native state, not yet cut; (colloq.) a worthy, good-hearted, but uncouth person. diamond-back, n. The salt-marsh turtle or terrapin; a kind of moth. diamond-cement, n. Cement used for setting diamonds. diamond-drill, n. An annular drill the cutting edge of which is set with diamonds for boring very hard substances. diamond-field, n. A region yielding diamonds. diamond jubilee, n. The sixtieth anniversary of a sovereign's accession. diamond-point, n. A stylus or cutting tool with a point tipped with a diamond, used by etchers, engravers, lapidaries, etc.; (pl.) an oblique crossing of railway lines. diamond-snake, n. Diamond-marked snakes of southern Australia and Tasmania. diamond-wedding, n. The sixtieth anniversary of a marriage. diamondiferous (-dif′ ĕr ŭs), a. diamond-wise, adv.

Diana (dī ăn′ ă) [Latin name of the Greek Artemis, the goddess of hunting], n. A fine horsewoman; a woman who hunts; (Astron.) the 78th asteroid. diana-monkey, n. A large African monkey, Cercopithecus diana, named from the white crescent-shaped band on its forehead.

diandria (dī ăn′ dri ă) [mod. L. (DI- (2), Gr. andr-, stem of aner, man, male)], n.pl. (Bot.) A Linnæan order of plants the flowers of which have only two stamens. diandrous, a.

dianoetic (dī ă nō et′ ik) [Gr. dianoētikos, from dianoētos, conceived in the mind, from dianoeisthai (DIA-, noein, to think)], a. Pertaining to the rational or discursive faculty; intellectual. n. Logic as treating of reasoning; the science that deals with the laws of conception, judgment, and reasoning.

dianthus (dī ăn′ thŭs) [Gr. Dios, of Zeus, anthos, flower], n. A genus of caryophyllaceous plants, including the pinks and carnations.

diapason (dī ă pā′ zŏn), diapase (dī′ ă pāz) [L. diapāsōn, Gr. diapasōn (short for dia pasōn chordōn, through all the chords)], n. An harmonious combination of notes; a melodious succession of notes; the foundation stops of an organ; an harmonious burst of music; a recognized standard of pitch amongst musicians; harmony, concord; range, pitch.

diaper (dī′ ă pĕr) [O.F. diapre, diasper, Byz. Gr. diaspros (DIA-, aspros, white)], n. A silk or linen cloth woven with geometric patterns; a towel or napkin made of this; a baby's napkin, nappy; a surface decoration consisting of square or diamond reticulations. v.t. To decorate or embroider with this. diaper-work, n. (Arch.) diaphanous (dī ăf′ ă nŭs) [med. L. diaphanus, Gr. diaphanēs (DIA-, phan-, stem of phainein, to show)], a. Transparent, pellucid; having the power of transmitting light. diaphane (dī′ ă fān) [F.], n. A transparent substance; a transparency. diaphaneity (dī ă fă nē′ i ti), n. Transparency; perviousness to light. diaphanie [F.], n. A process for imitating stained glass by transparencies. diaphanometer (-nom′ ē tĕr) [-METER], n. An instrument for measuring the transparency of the atmosphere. diaphanoscope (-făn′ ō skōp) [-SCOPE], n. A dark box for exhibiting transparent positive photographs.

diaphoretic (dī ă fō ret′ ik) [L. diaphorēticus, Gr. diaphorētikos, from diaphorēsis, sweat, from diaphorein (DIA-, phorein, to carry)], a. Having the power of promoting perspiration. n. A medicine having this property.

diaphragm (dī′ ă frăm) [L., from Gr. diaphragma, from diaphrēgnunai (DIA-, phrassein, to fence)], n. The large muscular partition separating the thorax from the abdomen; the straight calcareous plate dividing the cavity of certain shells into two parts; (Teleph. and Wire.) the vibrating disk in the mouthpiece and earpiece of a telephone, or in the loudspeaker of a radio receiver; a dividing membrane or partition; (Opt.) an annular disk excluding marginal rays of light. diaphragmatic (-măt′ ik), a. diaphragmatitis (-tī′ tis), n. (Path.) Inflammation of the diaphragm.

diaphysis (dī ăf′ i sis) [Gr. diaphusis (DIA-, phuein, to bring forth)], n. (Anat.) The shaft of a bone as distinct from the ends; (Bot.) an abnormal elongation of the inflorescence.

diarchy (dī′ ar ki) [DI (2), Gr. archia, rule], n. A government by two rulers.

diarist, etc. [DIARY].

diarrhœa (dī ă rē′ ă) [L., from Gr. diarrhoia (DIA-, rheein, to flow)], n. The excessive discharge of fæcal matter from the intestines. diarrhœal, diarrhœic, a.

diarthrosis (dī ar thrō′ sis) [DIA-, ARTHROSIS], n. An articulation of the bones permitting them to act upon each other; free arthrosis.

diary (dī' ā ri) [L. diārium, from diēs, a day], n. An account of the occurrences of each day; the book in which these are registered; a daily calendar with blank spaces for notes; (Sc.) a railway time-table. diarial (dī ār' i ăl), a. diarian, n. diarist (dī' ā rist), n. One who keeps a diary. diaristic (dī ā ris' tik), a. diarize, v.t. and i.

diastaltic (dī ā stăl' tik) [Gr. diastaltikos, from diastellein, to separate (DIA-, stellein, to set, to send)], a. (Physiol.) A term applied to reflex action and the nerves governing this.

diastase (dī' ā stās) [F., from Gr. diastasis, separation (DIA-, stasis, placing, from the root sta-, to stand)], n. (Chem.) A nitrogenous substance produced during the germination of all seeds, and having the power of converting starch into dextrine, and then into sugar. diastasic (-stās' ik), a.

diastasis (dī ās' tā sis) [as prec.], n. (Path.) Separation of bones without fracture, or of the pieces of a fractured bone.

diastema (dī ā stē' mā) [L., from Gr. diastēma (as DIASTASE)], n. (pl. -ata) (Zool. and Anat.) A space between two adjacent teeth, as in most mammals except man.

diastole (dī ăs' tō lē) [med. L., from Gr. diastolē, from diastellein (DIA-, stellein, to send)], n. Dilatation of the heart and arteries alternating with systole. systole and diastole: The pulse; (fig.) regular reaction; fluctuation. diastolic (-stol' ik), a.

diastyle (dī' ā stil) [L. diastylos, Gr. diastulos (DIA-, stulos, a pillar)], n. (Arch.) An arrangement of columns in which the space between them is equal to three or four diameters of the shaft. a. Arranged on this plan.

diatessaron (dī ā tes' ā rŏn) [O.F., from L. diatessarōn, Gr. dia tessarōn, by four], n. A harmony of the four Gospels; *(Mus.) the interval of a fourth, composed of a greater and lesser tone and a greater semitone.

diathermancy (dī ā thĕr' măn si) [F. diathermansie (DIA-, Gr. thermansis, heating, from thermainein, to heat)], n. The property of being freely pervious to heat. diathermal, a. diathermanous, diathermous, a. diathermaneity (-nē' i ti), n. diathermometer (-mom' ē tĕr) n. diathermy (dī ā ther' mi), n. (Med.) The employment of high-frequency currents for the production of localized heat in the tissues.

diathesis (dī ăth' ē sis) [Gr., from diatithenain (DIA-, tithenain, to put)], n. (pl. -theses) (Med.) A constitution of body predisposing to certain diseases.

diatom (dī' ā tŏm) [Gr. diatomos, cut through, from diatemnein (DIA-, temnein, to cut)], n. Any individual of the genus Diatoma or of the order Diatomaceæ, a group of microscopic algæ with siliceous coverings which exist in immense numbers at the bottom of the sea, multiplying by division or conjugation, and occurring as fossils in such abundance as to form strata of vast area and considerable thickness. diatomaceous (-mā' shŭs), a. diatomist (dī ăt' ō mist), n. diatomite, n. (Geol.) Any diatomaceous deposit.

diatomic (dī ā tom' ik) [DI- (2), ATOMIC], a. (Chem.) Containing only two atoms; containing two replaceable univalent atoms.

diatomous (dī ăt' ō mŭs) [Gr. diatomos, as DIATOM], a. (Min.) Having crystals with one distinct diagonal cleavage.

diatonic (dī ā ton' ik) [F. diatonique, L. diatonicus, Gr. diatonikos, from diatonos (DIA-, tonos, TONE)], a. (Mus.) Of the regular scale without chromatic alteration; applied to the major and minor scales, or to chords, intervals, and melodic progressions. diatonically, adv.

diatribe (dī' ā trīb) [F., from L. diatriba, Gr. diatribē, a wearing away, a discussion, a discourse, from diatribein (DIA-, tribein, to rub)], n. An invective discourse; a strain of harsh criticism or denunciation.

dib (1) (dib) [var. of DAB], v.i. To tap; to dap; to dibble. dibber, n. A dibble.

dib (2) (dib) [prob. from prec.], n. A sheep's knuckle-bone; (pl.) a children's game in which these are thrown into the air and caught on the back of the hand; counters used with card games; pl. (slang) money.

dibasic (dī bā' sik) [DI- (2), BASIC], a. (Chem.) Containing two bases or two replaceable atoms.

dibble (dibl) [perh. from DIB (1)], n. A pointed instrument used to make a hole in the ground to receive seed. v.t. To make holes with a dibble; to plant with a dibble. v.i. To use a dibble; to dap as in angling. dibbler, n. One who dibbles; a machine for dibbling.

dibranchiata (dī brăng ki ā' tā) [DI-, Gr. branchia, gills], n.pl. (Zool.) An order of cephalopods, having only two gills, the shell rarely external and never chambered. dibranchiate (di brăng' ki āt), a. and n.

dicacity (di kăs' i ti) [L. dicāx dicācem, from dicere, to speak], n. Talkativeness; fluency, pertness.

dice (1), n.pl. [DIE (2)].

dice (2) (dīs) [DIE (2)], v.i. To play at dice. v.t. To gamble (away) at dice; to weave into a pattern with squares; to trim or ornament with such a pattern; (Bookbinding) to ornament with squares or diamonds by pressure. dice-box, n. The case out of which dice are thrown. dicer, n.

dicephalous (dī sef' ā lŭs) [Gr. dikephalos (DI- (2), kephalē, head)], a. Having two heads on one body.

dichlamydeous (dī klă mid' ē ŭs) [DI- (2), Gr. chlamus -udos, a cloak], a. (Bot.) Having both corolla and calyx.

dichogamous (dī kog' ā mŭs) [Gr. dicho-, asunder, gamos, wedded], a. (Bot.) Having stamens and pistils maturing at different times, so that self-fertilization is prevented. dichogamy, n.

dichotomy (dī kot' ō mi) [Gr. dicho-, as prec., -TOMY], n. A separation into two; (Log.) distribution of ideas into two mutually exclusive classes; (Astron.) the moon's phase when half the disk is illuminated; (Bot. and Zool.) a continued bifurcation or division into two parts. dichotomic, a. dichotomist, n. dichotomize, v.t. and i. dichotomous, a.

dichroic (dī krō′ik) [Gr. dichroos (DI- (2), chrōs, colour, complexion)], a. (Min.) Assuming two or more colours, according to the direction in which light is transmitted. dichroism (dī′ krō izm), n. dichroitic (dī krō it′ ik), a. dichroscope (dī′-), n.

dichromate (dī krō′ māt) [DI- (2), CHROMATE], n. (Chem.) A double chromate.

dichromatic (dī′ krō māt′ ik) [DI- (2), CHROMATIC], a. Characterized by or producing two colours, esp. of animals. dichromatism (dī krō′ mă tizm), n. (Optics) Inability to distinguish more than two colours.

dichromic (dī krō′ mik) [Gr. dichromos, as prec.], a. Having or perceiving only two colours. dichromism (dī′ krō mizm), n. A form of colour-blindness in which only two of the three primary colours are distinguished.

dicht (dicht) [DIGHT], v.t. (Sc.) To wipe, to clean up.

dick (dik) [prob. short for DECLARATION], n. (Am. slang) A detective. to take one's dick: To swear; to make a solemn affirmation. up to dick: Up to the mark, quite satisfactory; artful, wide-awake.

dickens (dik ènz) [perh. from Dickon, Richard], n. (colloq.) The devil, the deuce.

dicker (dik′ ėr) [M.E. dyker, late L. dicora, L. decūria, a set of ten, from decem, ten], n. Half-a-score, esp. of hides. v.i. (Am.) To barter, to haggle; to carry on a petty trade. v.t. To barter or exchange.

dicky (1) (dik′ i) [etym. doubtful], n. (slang or colloq.) An ass, a donkey; a pinafore or bib; a front separate from the shirt; a seat behind the body of a carriage or a motor-car; a driver's seat; a bird. dicky-bird, n. (colloq.) A little bird.

dicky (2) (dik′ i) [etym. unknown], a. Doubtful, questionable; queer, unwell.

diclinic (dī klin′ ik) [Gr. DI- (2), klinē, a bed], a. (Cryst.) Having two of the axes obliquely inclined.

diclinous (dī′ klin ùs) [as prec.], a. (Bot.) Having the stamens and the pistils on separate flowers. diclinism, n.

dicotyledon (dī kòt i lē′ dòn) [DI (2), COTYLEDON], n. (Bot.) A plant with two cotyledons. dicotyledones [mod. L.], n.pl. The largest and most important class of flowering plants containing all those with two cotyledons. dicotyledonous, a.

dicrotic (dī krot′ ik) [Gr. dikrotos (DI- (2), krotos, a beat)], a. (Physiol.) Double-beating (of a pulse in an abnormal state).

dictaphone (dik′ tă fōn) [perh. from L. dicta, pl. of DICTUM, or from foll., -PHONE], n. An apparatus for recording sounds, used for taking down correspondence, etc., to be afterwards transcribed.

dictate (dik tāt′) [L. dictātus, p.p. of dictāre, freq. of dicere, to say], v.t. To read or recite to another words to be written or repeated; to prescribe, to lay down with authority, to impose, as terms. v.i. To give orders; to utter words to be written or repeated by another. n. (dik′ tāt) An order, an injunction; a direction, a precept. dictation (-tā′ shùn), n. dictator (-tā′ tòr), n. One who dictates; one invested with supreme authority; (Hist.) a Roman magistrate created in time of emergency, and invested with absolute power; a ruler with similar authority appointed in a time of civil disorder or securing the supremacy after a revolution. dictatorate, dictature, n. dictatorial (-tă tôr′ i ăl), a. Pertaining to a dictator; imperious, overbearing. dictatorially, adv. dictatorship, n. dictatress (dik tā′ tres), n. dictatory (dik′-), a. Dictatorial, dogmatical.

diction (dik′ shùn) [L. dictio, from dicere, to say], n. The use of words; manner of expression; style; *verbal description.

dictionary (dik′ shùn ăr i) [med. L. dictiōnārium, from prec.], n. A book containing the words of any language in alphabetical order, with their definitions, or with their equivalents in another language; a work of information on any subject under words arranged alphabetically.

dictum (dik′ tùm) [L., neut. p.p. of dicere, to say], n. (pl. -ta) A positive or dogmatic assertion; a judge's personal opinion on a point of law as distinguished from the decision of a court; a maxim, an adage.

dictyogen (dik′ ti ō jen, dik ti′ ō jen) [Gr. diktuon, a net, -GEN], n. (Bot.) A sub-class (proposed by Lindley) of monocotyledonous plants with reticulated leaves often articulated with the stem.

dicynodont (dī sin′ ō dont) [DI- (2), kun- (stem of kuōn), dog, odont-, tooth], n. (Palæont.) A large fossil reptile of a lizard-like form with turtle jaws.

differentia (dif ėr en' shi à) [L., as prec.], n. That which distinguishes one species from another of the same genus; an essential attribute, which when added to the name of the genus distinctly marks out the species; thus the attribute of rationality is the differentia of the species 'man' from all other animals. differential, a. Differing; consisting of a difference; making or depending on a difference or distinction; relating to specific differences; pertaining to differentials; (Phys. and Mech.) relating to the difference between sets of motions acting in the same direction, or between pressures, etc.; n. (Math.) an infinitesimal difference between two consecutive states of a variable quantity. differential calculus, n. (Math.) The method of finding an infinitely small quantity, which, being taken infinite times, shall equal a given quantity. differential car axle: (Motor.) The driving axle of a car (usu. the rear axle) in which the motive power is transmitted through a differential gear. differential coefficient, n. (Math.) The measure of the rate of change of a function relatively to its variable. differential duties, n.pl. Duties levied unequally upon the productions of different countries. differential gear, n. (Mach.) A device of bevelled planetary and other wheels which permits of the relative rotation of two shafts driven by a third. Applied to a motor-car it enables the rear (driving) wheels to rotate at different speeds when rounding a corner. differential motion, n. A mechanical movement in which a part moves with a velocity equal to the difference between the velocities of two other parts. differential screw, n. A screw with two threads of unequal pitch on the same shaft, one unwinding as the other winds up. differential winding, n. The combination of two insulated wires in an electric coil, through which currents pass in opposite directions, employed in telegraphy as a resistance coil.

differentiate (dif ėr en′ shi āt) [mod. L. differentiātus, p.p. of differentiāre, from prec.], v.t. To make different; to constitute difference between, of, or in; to discriminate by the differentia, to mark off as different; (Math.) to obtain the differential coefficient of; (Biol.) to develop variation in; to specialize. v.i. To develop so as to become different, to acquire a distinct character. differentiation (-ā′ shŭn), n.

difficile (dif′ i sēl) [F., from L. difficilis (DIF-, facilis, easy)], a. Awkward, hard to deal with; uncompliant, uncompromising.

difficult (dif′ i kŭlt) [from difficulty, O.F. difficulté, L. difficultās -tātem, from difficilis, as prec.], a. Hard to do or carry out; troublesome; hard to please; not easily managed; hard to understand; cantankerous. difficultly, adv. difficulty, n. The quality of being difficult; anything difficult; an obstacle; objection, reluctance, scruple; (pl.) pecuniary embarrassment.

diffident (dif′ i dėnt) [L. diffidens -entem, pres.p. of diffidere (DIF-, fidere, to trust, from fidēs, faith)], a. Distrustful of oneself or of one's powers; bashful, modest, shy; *distrustful. diffidence, n. Distrust of oneself; bashfulness, shyness; *distrust of others. diffidently, adv.

diffluent (dif′ lū ėnt) [L. diffluens -entem, pres.p. of diffluere (DIF-, fluere, to flow)], a. Flowing apart or away, dissolving; deliquescing, becoming fluid. diffluence, n.

diffract (di frăkt′) [L. diffractus, p.p. of diffringere (DIF-, frangere, to break)], v.t. To break in parts; (Opt.) to break up as in a prism. diffraction, n. (Opt.) The separation into light or dark spaces or bands that light undergoes when, by passing near the edge of an opaque body, it is deflected from its direct course. diffractive, a. diffractively, adv.

diffuse (1) (di fūz′) [L. diffūsus, p.p. of diffundere (DIF-, fundere, to pour)], v.t. To pour forth; to spread abroad by pouring out; to circulate; to cause to intermingle; to dissipate; *to confuse. v.i. To be diffused; to intermingle by diffusion. diffusedly, adv. diffused lighting: A form of illumination in which the light is softened and spread over an area instead of being concentrated in one spot. diffuser, n. One who or that which diffuses or circulates. diffusible, a. diffusibility (-bil′ i ti), n.

diffuse (2) (di fūs′) [as prec.], a. Diffused, scattered, spread out; copious, prolix, not concise; (Bot.) diverging or spreading widely. diffusely, adv. Copiously, verbosely, fully. diffuseness, n. diffusion (di fū′zhŭn), n. The act of diffusing a liquid, fluid, etc.; a spreading abroad of news, etc.; the state of being widely dispersed. diffusion-tube, n. (Chem.) An instrument for determining the rate of diffusion of different gases. diffusive (di fū′ siv), a. Diffusing; tending to diffuse; spreading, circulating, widely distributed. diffusively, adv. diffusiveness, n.

dig (dig) [prob. from F. diguer, to make a dike (digue)], v.t. (p. dug, past p. dug) To excavate or turn up with a spade or similar instrument, or with hands, claws, etc.; to thrust or push into something; to obtain by digging; to make by digging; to poke, to pierce. v.i. To work with a spade; to excavate or turn up ground with a spade or other implement; to search, make one's way, thrust, pierce, or make a hole by digging. n. A piece of digging; a thrust, a poke; (Am. colloq.) a plodding student. to dig oneself in: (fig.) To take up permanent quarters; to refuse to budge; to make oneself indispensable. to dig out: To obtain by digging; (fig.) to obtain by research. to dig through: To open a passage through. to dig up: To excavate; to extract or raise by digging; to break up (ground) by digging; (fig.) to obtain by research. to have a dig at: (fig.) To make a cutting or sarcastic remark. digger, n. One who digs, esp. a gold-miner; an implement, machine, or part of a machine that digs; one of a tribe of North-American Indians who live chiefly on roots; (Austral. slang) a fellow, a man. digging, n. The act of opening the ground with a spade; (pl.) a gold-mine or gold-field; (colloq.) lodgings.

digamma (di găm′ à) [L., from Gr. (DI- (2), gamma, the letter g)], n. A letter in the oldest Greek alphabet (F) which had the sound of w, named from its resemblance to two gammas placed one above the other.

digastric (di găs′trik) [DI-, Gr. gaster, belly], a. Having a double belly or protuberance. digastric muscle, n. A double muscle which depresses the lower jaw.

digest (di jest′) [L. digestus, p.p. of digerere (DI- (1), gerere, to carry)], v.t. To arrange under proper heads or titles, to classify; to reduce to system or order; to arrange methodically in the mind; to think over; to soften and prepare by heat; to concoct in the stomach in order to assimilate; to promote the digestion of; to assimilate; (fig.) to receive and enjoy; to put up with. v.i. To be digested; to be prepared by heat. n. (dī′ jest) A compendium or summary arranged under proper heads or titles; a magazine containing summaries of articles, etc., in current literature. (Law) a collection of Roman laws arranged under proper heads, as the pandects of Justinian. digestible, a. digestibility (-bil' i ti), n. digestibly, adv. digester, n. One who digests; anything which helps to promote digestion; an apparatus for cooking food by exposing to a heat above boiling-point. digestion (di jes' tyŭn, -chŭn), n. The act or process of assimilating food in the stomach; the conversion of food into chyme; the power of digesting; concoction for the purpose of extracting the essence from a substance, stewing; (Bot.) the absorption of carbonic acid by plants under the influence of light; mental reduction to order and method. digestive, a. Pertaining to or promoting digestion; n. Any substance which aids or promotes digestion; (Med.) an application disposing to suppurate.

dight (dīt) [A.-S. dihtan, L. dictāre (cp. G. dichten, to make poetry)], v.t. To dress, array, to adorn; to equip, to prepare (usu. in p.p.). a. Dressed, adorned, embellished.

digit (dij' it) [L. digitus], n. A finger; the measure of a finger's breadth, or three-quarters of an inch; any integer under ten, so called from the primitive habit of counting on the fingers; (Astron.) the twelfth part of the diameter of the sun or moon (used to express the quantity or magnitude of an eclipse); (Anat. and Zool.) a finger or toe. digital, a. and n.

digitalis (dij i tā' lis) [mod. L., pertaining to the fingers, alluding to G. Fingerhut, thimble], n. (Bot.) A genus of scrophulariaceous plants, containing the foxglove (D. purpurea); (Med.) the dried leaves of the foxglove, which act as a cardiac sedative. digitform (di jit' i fôrm), a. Finger-shaped, used of the corolla of digitalis. digitalin (dij' i tā lin), digitalia (dij i tā' li ȧ), n. (Chem.) An alkaloid obtained from the foxglove.

digitate, -tated (dij' i tāt, -ĕd) [L. digitātus, from digitus, DIGIT], a. (Zool.) Having finger-like processes; (Bot.) branching into distinct leaves or lobes like fingers. digitately, adv. digitation (-tā' shŭn), n. digitato-, comb. form.

digitigrade (dij' it i grād) [F., from L. digitus, DIGIT, -gradus, walking], a. Belonging to the Digitigrada, a section of the carnivora (according to Cuvier's classification) comprising the families of cats, dogs, hyænas, and weasels, in which the heel is raised above the ground, so that these animals walk on their toes. n. A digitigrade animal.

diglyph (dī' glif) [Gr. digluphos (DI- (2), gluphein, to carve)], n. (Arch.) A projection like a triglyph, with only two channels instead of three.

dignify (dig' ni fī) [O.F. dignifier, late L. dignificāre (dignus, worthy, -FY)], v.t. To make worthy; to invest with dignity; to make illustrious; to exalt. dignified, a. Invested with dignity; stately; gravely courteous.

lectro- [Gr. ēlektron, amber], comb. form. Having electricity for its motive power; resulting from, or pertaining to, electricity. electro-bath, n. A solution of a metallic salt used in electrotyping and electro-plating. electro-biology, n. Electro-physiology, the science of the electric phenomena of living organisms. electro-biologist, n. electro-cardiograph, n. (Med.) An instrument which indicates and records the manner in which the heart muscle is contracting. electro-cardiagram, n. A record so produced. electro-chemistry, n. The science of the chemical effects produced by electricity. electro-chemical, a. electro-copper, v.t. To give copper coating by electrolysis. electro-culture, n. The application of electricity to tillage. electrocute, v.t. To kill by an electric shock; to carry out a judicial sentence of death by administering a powerful electric shock. electrocution, n. electro-dynamics, n. The science of electricity in motion. electro-dynamic, a. electrodynamometer, n. An instrument for measuring the strength of an electric current. electro-engraving, n. Engraving by means of electricity. electrograph, n. The record of an electrometer. electro-kinetics, n. Electro-dynamics. electrology, n. The science of electricity. electrolysis (-trol' i sis), n. The decomposition of chemical compounds by the passage of an electric current through them; the science dealing with this process and its phenomena. electrolyte, n. A compound which may be decomposed by an electric current. electrolyze, v.t. To decompose by direct action of electricity or galvanism. electro-magnet, n. A bar of soft iron rendered magnetic by the passage of a current of electricity through a coil of wire surrounding it. electro-magnetic, a. electro-magnetism, n. Magnetism produced by an electric current; the science which treats of the production of magnetism by electricity, and the relations between magnetism and electricity. electro-metallurgy, n. The act of separating metals from their alloys by means of electricity. electrometer (-trom' ė tėr), n. An instrument for measuring the amount of electrical force, or for indicating the presence of electricity. electrometrical (-met' rik ăl), a. electromobile, n. (Motor.) A motor-car propelled by batteries. electro-motion, n. The passage of an electric current in a circuit; mechanical motion produced by means of electricity. electro-motive, a. electro-motor, n. A machine for converting electric into mechanical energy. electro-muscular, a. Pertaining to the action of the muscles under electric influence. electro-negative, a. Passing to the positive pole in electrolysis; pertaining to or producing negative electricity. n. An electro-negative element. electropathy, n. The treatment of disease by electricity. electrophorous (trof' ŏr ŭs), n. An instrument for generating statical electricity by induction. electro-physiology, n. The study of the electrical phenomena of living organisms. electro-physiological (-loj' ik ăl), a. electro-plate, v.t. To cover with a coating of silver or other metal by exposure in a solution of a metallic salt, which is decomposed by electrolysis. n. Articles so produced. electro-polar, a. Applied to a conductor positively electrified at one end and negatively at the other. electro-positive, a. Having a tendency to pass to the negative pole in electricity; pertaining to or producing positive electricity. n. An electro-positive element. electroscope, n. An instrument for detecting the presence and the quality of electricity. electro-static, a. Pertaining to electro-statics; produced by electricity at rest. electro-statics, n. The science of statical electricity. electro-therapeutics, n. Electropathy, also called electro-therapy, electro-thermancy, n. The science of the relations of electric currents and the temperature of bodies. electro-thermic, a. electrotonus (el ĕk trot' ō nŭs), -tone (ē lek' trō tōn) [Gr. tonos, tension], n. The alteration in the activity of a nerve or muscle under the action of a galvanic current. electrotonic (-ton' ik), a. electrotonize (el ĕk trot' ō nīz), v.t. electrotype, n. The process of producing copies of medals, woodcuts, type, etc., by the electric deposition of copper upon a mould; the facsimile so produced. v.t. To copy by this process. electrotyper, n. electrotypist, n.

electrode (ē lek' trōd) [ELECTRO-, Gr. hodos, way], n. One of the poles of a galvanic battery, an anode or cathode.

electrolier (ē lek trō lēr') [ELECTRO-, lier (as in CHANDELIER, GASELIER)], n. A pendant or bracket for supporting an electric lamp in a building.

electron (ēl ek' tron) [ELECTRO], n. (Phys.) A particle of an atom bearing a negative electric charge, the most numerous constituent of matter and probably the cause of all electrical phenomena. electron camera, n. (Television) A device which converts an optical image into an electric current by electronic means. electronic brain, n. Popular term for a type of calculating machine that is worked by thermionic valves.

electrum (ē lek' trŭm) [L. ēlectrum, Gr. ēlektron, amber, conn. with ēlektōr, shining], n. An alloy of gold and silver in use among the ancients; native gold containing silver; an alloy of copper, zinc, and nickel, also called German silver.

electuary (ē lek' tū ar i) [late L. ēlectuārium, prob. from Gr. ekleikton (ekleichein, to lick away, cp. LICK)], n. A purgative medicine compounded with some sweet confection.

eleemosynary (el ē ē mos' in ar i) [med. L. eleēmosynārius, Gr. eleēmosunē, ALMS], a. Given or done by way of alms; devoted to charitable purposes; supported by or dependent on charity. n.* One who subsists on charity.

elegant (el' ē gant) [F. élégant, L. ēlegantem, acc. of ēlegans, conn. with ēligere, to choose, see ELECT], a. Pleasing to good taste; graceful, well-proportioned, delicately finished, refined; *having a fine sense of beauty or propriety; (vulg.) excellent, first-rate, capital. elegant extracts, n.pl. A collection of choice passages in prose and verse from various authors; (Mil. slang) the 85th Foot. elegance, n. elegantly, adv.

elegiac (el ē jī' ak) [L. elegiacus, Gr. elegeiakos, as ELEGY], a. Pertaining to or of the nature of elegies; (Pros.) suited to elegy; mournful. n.pl. Verse consisting of alternate hexameters and pentameters, in which the elegies of the Greeks and Romans were commonly written.

elegy (el' ē ji) [F. élégie, L. elegīa, Gr. elegeia (elegos, a lament)], n. A lyrical poem or a song of lamentation; a poem of a plaintive, meditative kind; a poem written in elegiac verse. elegize, v.t. To compose an elegy upon. v.i. To compose an elegy; to write in a plaintive strain. elegist, n.

eleme (el' ē mi) [Turk.], a. Applied to a superior kind of dried figs from Turkey. eleme figs, n.pl.

element (el' ē mĕnt) [O.F., from L. elementum (etym. doubtful)], n. One of the fundamental parts of which anything is composed; (Chem.) a substance which cannot be resolved by chemical analysis; (pl.) earth, air, fire, and water, formerly considered as simple elements; the natural habitat of any creature, as water of fish; the proper or natural sphere of any person or thing, anything necessary to be taken into account in coming to a conclusion; the rudiments of any science or art; (Eccles.) the bread and wine used in the eucharist; (Elec.) the resistance wire of an electric heater; one of the electrodes of a primary secondary cell. elemental, a. Pertaining to or arising from first principles; pertaining to the four elements of which the world was supposed to be formed; hence, pertaining to the primitive forces of nature; ultimate, simple, uncompounded. elemental spirits, n.pl. Those identified with natural forces, as salamanders, sylphs, gnomes, and undines, said to inhabit respectively fire, air, earth, and water. elementalism, n. The theory which resolves the gods of antiquity into the forces and aspects of nature. elementally, adv. In an elemental manner; literally. elementaloid, a.

elementary (el ē men' tar i) [prec., -ARY], a. Consisting of one element; primary, uncompounded; rudimentary, treating of first principles, introductory. elementary substance, n. An element. elementary schools, n.pl. Primary schools. elementarily, adv. elementariness, n.

elemi (el' ē mi) [etym. unknown], n. A gum resin obtained from the Manila pitch-tree, Canarium commune, used in pharmacy. elemin, n. (Chem.) elenchus (ē leng' kŭs) [L., from Gr. elenchos, cross-examination], n. (pl. -chi) An argument by which an opponent is made to contradict himself; a refutation. elenctic, a.

elephant (el' ē fănt) [M.E. olifaunt, O.F. olifant, L. elephantem, acc. of elephas, Gr. elephas (etym. doubtful)], n. A large pachydermatous animal, four-footed, with flexible proboscis and long curved tusks, of which two species now exist, Elephas indicus and E. africanus, the former partially domesticated and used as a beast of draught and burden; a size of paper (28 × 23 in.; double, 40 × 26½ in.). to see or show the elephant: (Am.) To see or show life, esp. the sights of a great city. white elephant: A useless and expensive possession (alluding to the cost of an elephant's keep). elephant-beetle, n. A large West African beetle, Goliathus giganteus or G. cacicus. elephantiasis (el ė făn tī' ă sis), n. A cutaneous disease occurring in tropical countries, in which the skin of the patient becomes hardened and the part affected greatly enlarged. elephantine (el ė făn' tīn), a. Pertaining to or resembling an elephant; huge, immense; unwieldy, clumsy. elephantine epoch, n. (Palæont.) That period during which the large pachydermata abounded. elephantoid, a. and n.

Eleusinian (el ū sin' i ăn) [L. Eleusīnius, Gr. Eleusīnios], a. Relating to Eleusis, in ancient Attica, or to the mysteries in honour of Ceres annually celebrated there. (fig.) darkly mysterious.

eleuthero- [Gr. eleutheros, free], combining form. Free; not adherent. eleutheromania (ė lū thėr ō mā' ni ă) [-MANIA], n. A mad passion or enthusiasm for freedom. eleutheromaniac, a. and n. eleutheropetalous (-pet' ă lŭs) [PETALOUS], a. (Bot.) Composed of distinct or separate petals.

levate (el' ė vāt) [L. ēlevātus, p.p. of ēlevāre (E-, levāre, to lift, from levis, light)], v.t. To lift up; to raise aloft; to raise from a lower to a higher place; to exalt in position or dignity; to make louder or higher; to raise in character or intellectual capacity; to refine, to improve; to elate, to animate, to exhilarate; (colloq., p.p.) to make slightly intoxicated. elevated railway, n. A city railroad raised on pillars above the street-level. elevation (-vā' shŭn), n. The act of elevating; the state of being elevated; an elevated position or ground; height above sea-level; the height of a building; a side or end view of an object or building drawn with or without reference to perspective; (Astron.) the angular altitude of a heavenly body above the horizon; (Gunnery) the angle of the line of fire with the plane of the horizon; (fig.) exaltation, grandeur, dignity. elevation of the Host: (R.-C. Ch.) The part of the Mass in which the celebrant raises the Host above his head, to be adored. elevator (el' ė vā tŏr), n. One who or that which elevates; (Anat.) a muscle whose function it is to raise any part of the body; a machine to raise grain from a car or ship to a high level, whence it can be discharged into any other receptacle; a lift; (Aer.) a hinged flap on the tail plane to provide vertical control. elevatory, a.

leven (ė lev' ėn) [A.-S. endlufon, endleofan, from O.Teut. ainlif- (cp. Dut. and G. elf, Goth. ainlif, Icel. ellifu)], a. Ten with one added. n. The sum of ten with one added; a symbol representing the sum of ten and one, as 11 or xi; (Cricket, Assoc. Football) the eleven men selected to play for a particular side. the eleven: The disciples of Christ without Judas. eleventh, a. The next in order after the tenth; forming one of eleven equal parts. n. One of eleven equal parts; (Mus.) the interval of an octave and a fourth. at the eleventh hour: At the last moment (in allusion to the parable of the labourers, Matt. xx.). elevenses, n.pl. (colloq.) A snack taken in the middle of the morning.

elf (elf) [A.-S. ælf (cp. Icel. álfr, G. elf, also alp, a nightmare)], n. (pl. elves) A tiny supernatural being supposed to inhabit groves and wild and desolate places, and to exercise a mysterious power over man; a fairy; a mischievous person; an imp; a tiny creature, a dwarf; a pet name for a child. v.t.* To twist or tangle (the hair) in an intricate manner. elf-arrow, -bolt, -dart, n. A flint arrow-head used by the men of the Stone Age, popularly thought to be shot by fairies. elf-child, n. A child supposed to be left by fairies in exchange for one taken away by them. elf-lock, n. Hair twisted in a knot, as if done by elves. elf-struck, a. Bewitched by elves. elfin, a. Elfish. n. A little elf; a sprite, an urchin. elfish, elvish, a. Like an elf; of the nature of an elf; proceeding from or caused by elves; mischievous.

Elgin Marbles (el' gin) [of the Earl of Elgin (1766–1841)], n.pl. Ancient sculptured marbles brought to England in 1812, by the Earl of Elgin, from the Parthenon or temple of Athene, etc. at Athens.

elicit (ė lis' it) [L. ēlicitus, p.p. of ēlicere (E-, lacere, to entice)], v.t. To draw out, evoke; to educe, extract.

elide (ė līd') [L. ēlīdere (E-, lædere, to dash)], v.t. To strike out, omit; (esp. in Gram.) to cut off (as the last syllable); (Law) to annul; to destroy.

eligible (el' i jibl) [F. éligible, L. ēligibilis, from ēligere, see ELECT], a. Fit or deserving to be chosen; desirable, suitable; fit or qualified to be chosen to any office or position; (colloq.) desirable for marriage. eligibility (-ji bil' i ti), n. eligibly, adv.

eliminate (ė lim' i nāt) [L. *ēlimināt*us, p.p. of ēlimināre (E-, limin- stem of līmen, threshold)], v.t. To cast out, expel; to cast aside, remove, get rid of; to exclude, to ignore (certain considerations); (Math.) to cause to disappear from an equation; (incorrectly) to disengage, to isolate. eliminable, a. elimination (-nā' shŭn), n. The act of eliminating; expulsion, ejection; leaving out or passing over; (Math.) removal of a quantity from an equation. eliminator, n. (Wire.) A device for supplying a battery receiving set with electricity from the mains.

eliquation (el i kwā' shŭn) [L. ēliquatio -ōnem (E-, LIQUATION)], n. Liquefaction; (Metal.) the separation of a fusible substance from another less fusible by heating to a degree sufficient to melt the former but not the latter.

elision (ė lizh' ŭn) [L. ēlīsio -ōnem (ELIDE)], n. The suppression of a letter or syllable for the sake of euphony, metre, etc.; the suppression of a passage in a book or a discourse. elisor (ė lī' zŏr), n. (Law) A sheriff's substitute for selecting a jury.

élite (ā lēt') [F., from L. ēlecta, fem. of ēlectus, ELECT], n. The pick, the flower, the best part.

elixir (ė lik' sėr) [med. L., from Arab. al-iksīr (al, the, Gr. xērion, dry powder for wounds)], n. The alchemists' liquor for transmuting metals into gold; a potion for prolonging life, usu. called elixir vitæ or elixir of life; a cordial, a sovereign remedy; the essential principle or quintessence; a distillation or concentrated tincture.

Elizabethan (ē liz ā bē' thăn) [Elizabeth, -AN], a. Pertaining to Queen Elizabeth or her time; in the style characterizing the literature, architecture, dress, etc., of her time. n. A personage or writer of that time.

elk (elk) [A.-S. elh, elch (cp. Icel. elgr, O.H.G. elaho, L. alces, Gr. alkē)], n. The largest animal of the deer family, Alces malchis, a native of northern Europe and of North America, where it is called the moose; applied also to the wapiti, Cervus Canadensis, and the eland. Irish elk: An extinct animal, Cervus megaceros. elk-nut, n. The buffalo nut, Hamiltonia oleifera. Elks, n.pl. A fraternal society.

ell (el) [A.-S. eln (cp. Dut. el, G. elle, Goth. aleina, Swed. aln, Gr. ōlenē, L. ulna, whence F. aune)], n. A measure of length, varying in different countries, for measuring cloth; the (obsolete) English ell is 45 in. give him an inch he'll take an ell: Will take liberties if possible. ell-wand, n. A measuring rod an ell long; (Sc.) the belt of Orion.

ellagic (ē lăj' ik) [F. ellagique, from ellag, anagram of galle, gall-nut], a. Pertaining to gall-nuts or to gallic acid. ellagic acid, n. An acid obtained from gallic acid, bezoars, certain barks, etc.

elleborin [HELLEBORE].

ellipse (1) (ē lips') [L. ellipsis, Gr. elleipsis, from elleipein (el-, en, in, leipein, to leave)], n. A regular oval, a plane curve of such a form that the sum of two straight lines, drawn from any point in it to two given fixed points called the foci, will always be the same; a conic section formed by a plane intersecting a cone obliquely. ellipsograph, n. An instrument for describing ellipses. elliptic, -al (ē lip' tik, -ăl), a. Pertaining to an ellipse; (Gram. and Rhet.) pertaining to ellipsis. elliptically, adv. ellipticity (el ip tis' i ti), n. The quality of being elliptic; the extent to which any ellipse differs from a circle, or any ellipsoid from a sphere.

ellipsis, -lipse (2) (ē lip' sis, -lips') [as prec.], n. (pl. -ses) Omission of one or more words necessary to the complete construction of a sentence; *a mark denoting the omission of one or more words or letters, as in d——d for 'damned'; *an ellipse.

ellipsoid (ēl lip' soid) [ELLIPSE, -OID], n. A solid figure of which every plane section through one axis is an ellipse and every other section an ellipse or a circle; *a solid figure produced by the revolution of an ellipse about its axis. a. Ellipsoidal. ellipsoidal (-soi' dăl), a. Pertaining to an ellipsoid.

ellops (el' ŏps) [Gr.], n. A kind of serpent; a fish mentioned by the ancients.

elm (elm) [A.-S. (cp. Icel. ālmr, Swed. and Dan. alm, G. ulm, L. ulmus)], n. A tree of the genus Ulmus; the common English elm, U. campestris. elmen, a. Pertaining to the elm. elmy, a.

Elmo's, St. Elmo's fire (el' mōz fīr) [perh. corr. of Helena, sister of Castor and Pollux, or after It. Elmo or Ermo, St. Erasmus, a Syrian martyr of the 3rd cent.], n. The corposant.

elocution (ēl ō-, ē lō kū' shŭn) [L. ēlocūtio -ōnem, from ēloquī (E-, loquī, to speak)], n. The art, style, or manner of speaking or reading; effective oral delivery; *eloquence, oratory; *rhetoric, literary expression; appropriate language in speaking or writing. elocutionary, a. elocutionist, n.

eloge (ā lōzh') [F. éloge, L. ēlogium, a short saying (Gr. logos, a saying, a word), confused with eulogium, EULOGY], n. An encomium, a panegyric, esp. a discourse in honour of a deceased person.

Elohim (ē lō' him) [Heb. elōhīm, pl. used in sing. sense, God], n. The ordinary name of God in the Hebrew Scriptures. Elohist, n. A Biblical writer or one of the writers of parts of the Hexateuch, where the word Elohim is habitually used for Yahveh, Jehovah. Elohistic (el ō his' tik), a.

eloin (ē loin') [O.F. esloignier (F. éloigner), late L. exlongāre, ēlongāre, as foll.], v.t. To remove; to remove or seclude (oneself); to carry off; (Law) to remove beyond the jurisdiction of a court or sheriff.

elongate (ē' long gāt) [late L. ēlongātus, p.p. of ēlongāre, to remove (E-, longus, long)], v.t. To extend; to make longer; *to remove to a distance. v.i. To grow longer; (Bot.) to increase in length, to taper; *to depart; to recede. a. Lengthened, extended; (Bot. and Zool.) very slender in proportion to length. elongation (-gā' shŭn), n. The act of lengthening or extending; the state of being elongated; a prolongation, an extension; (Astron.) the angular distance of a planet from the sun or of a satellite from its primary.

elope (ē lōp') [A.-F. aloper, perh. from a M.E. alope or ilope, p.p. of aleapen or leapen, to LEAP (cp. the later M.Dut. ontlōpen and G. entlaufen)], v.i. To run away with a lover, with a view to clandestine marriage, or a paramour in defiance of social or moral restraint; to run away in a clandestine manner, to abscond. elopement, n.

eloquence (el' ō kwĕns) [F. éloquence, L. ēloquentia, ēloquens -ntem, pres.p. of ēloquī (E-,' loquī, to speak)], n. Fluent, powerful, and appropriate verbal expression, esp. of emotional ideas; eloquent language; rhetoric. eloquent, a. Having the power of expression in fluent, vivid, and appropriate, language; full of expression, feeling, or interest. eloquently, adv.

else (els) [A.-S. elles, gen. sing. used as adv. (cp. O.H.G. elles, alles, also L. alius, other)], adv. Besides, in addition, other; instead; otherwise, in the other case, if not. elsewhere, adv. In or to some other place. elsewhither, adv. (Thoreau.) elsin (el' sin) [perh. from M.Dut. elsene (Dut. els), cp. AWL], n. (Sc. and North.) An awl.

elucidate (ē loo' si dāt) [late L. ēlūcidātus, p.p. of ēlūcidāre (E-, lūcidus, bright)], v.t. To make lucid, throw light on; to render intelligible; to explain. elucidation (-dā' shŭn), n. elucidative, a. elucidator, n. elucidatory, a.

elude (ē lood') [L. ēlūdere (E-, lūdere, to play, p.p. lūsus)], v.t. To escape from by artifice or dexterity; to evade, to dodge, to shirk; to remain undiscovered or unexplained by; to baffle (search or inquiry); *to delude.

ul (ē′ lŭl) [Heb. ālal, to reap], n. The sixth month of the Jewish ecclesiastical, and the twelfth of their civil year, beginning with the new moon of our September.

lutriate (ė loo′ tri āt) [L. ēlutriātus, p.p. of ēlutriāre, to wash out], v.t. To purify by straining or washing so as to separate the lighter and the heavier particles; to decant liquid from. *elutriation (-ā′ shŭn), n.

van (el′ vàn) [etym. doubtful (perh. Corn. elven)], n. Intrusive igneous rock penetrating sedimentary strata in Cornwall, Devon, and Ireland; a vein or dike of this. elvanite, n. elvanitic (-nit′ ik), a.

ver (el′ vèr) [ELFARE], n. A young eel, especially a young conger.

vish (el′ vish) [ELF, -ISH], a. Pertaining to elves; elfish; mischievous. *elvish-marked, a. Marked by the fairies. elvishly, adv.

ysium (ė liz′ i ŭm, -lizh′ i ŭm) [L., from Gr. Elusion (pedion), the plain of the blessed], n. The abode of the souls of Greek heroes after death; (fig.) a place or state of perfect happiness. elysian, a.

ytron (el′ i trŏn) [Gr. elutron, a sheath, from eluein, to roll round], n. (pl. -tra) One of the horny sheaths which constitute the anterior wings of beetles; (Anat.) the vagina. elytriform (ė lit′ ri fôrm), a.

zevir (el′ zė vėr) [name of a celebrated family of printers, of Amsterdam (1595–1680)], n. A book printed by the Elzevirs. a. Printed by the Elzevirs; pertaining to or resembling the type used by them.
